Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: .College in 1836 he took the chair after a year of study in Paris. But the same year, 1837, with its financial stress, left the college in hardship, unable to pay its instructors and, in Loomis written words, without enough money in the treasury to take me out of the state. Salaries had for a time to be paid in farm produce. Yet during his seven years at Western Reserve one obtains glimpses of the unique Loom of after years at Yale. He built a campus fence a third of a mile long on which he spent many hours to establish an exact north and south line. More apocryphal is a tale how a mighty cyclone passed over the college and drove a dead hen into a sandbank an indefinite number of feet; and how Loomis, with a dead chicken fired from a field-piece, repeated nature...
